I read this book in about an hour, highlighting as I went. My wife and I have potty trained 5 children. We have two more to potty train and another on the way. Update: After 8 weeks our reluctant 3 year old (who would cry when placed on the potty) is fully potty trained after using this book. That includes day time, pooping, going out, nap times and even overnight! We are thrilled and can't remember having such quick and complete success! Julie's perspective on keeping things light and positive really helped. My wife highlighted specific statements and said them over and over when a potty accident would happen. Julie's emphasis on the child making connections was very reassuring when it was easy to feel discouraged because you at least felt perhaps progress was being made on the child's part mentally (and it was). Several weeks in we sort of hit a stall. We were day trained with an accident every day or two but not poop trained and not confident enough to go out in underwear so my wife went back to the book and outlined 4 things we weren't following the book on: -We weren't taking him out of diapers the moment he woke up -We were putting him back in diapers an hour before bed instead of waiting until closer to bed -We were putting him in diapers at naps -We weren't going out in underwear So we buckled down on those things. Taking away his diaper at naps was the turning point for getting him to poop in the potty. And amazingly we had only 3 accidents out too. Definitely worth the leap of faith! Now we've been around the block too many times to give too much credit to any one thing or child.
