"The modern girl thinks nothing of asking or luring a guy to have sex before they have much of a relationship."The above sentence is pretty much the pervasive sentiment you will find in this book.I bought this book obviously with some knowledge of what it would contain and some agreement with the title that a good amount of today's teen girls are very aggressive. However, this book makes young teenage girls seem like worldly prostitutes who prey and manipulate boys.Obviously some, maybe even a great many, do manipulate boys, as do some boys manipulate girls. Not only does the author not give an example of the later (which is fine, that is not the title of the book), but from the examples the author gives of girls manipulating boys, the author has overwhelmingly not seen that there is clearly another side to some of the stories and that the boys in these examples have most probably lied a bit (or more) as far as their involvement in the events that have taken place.A

story with a mom sending a girl home after finding her in their apartment building's hot tub with her son and her son's friend (in that situation whom do you feel has the advantage? Obviously to those with a clear mind, the boy who lied to his parents and did not tell them he was meeting a girl and he brought his friend is probably not in the position of being too thoroughly taken advantage of that night). The mom in this situation sends the girl home, without taking into account that she had to walk 3 blocks at night alone! Christian parenting?
