The Eggplant Cancer Cure: A Treatment For Skin Cancer And New Hope For Other Cancers From Nature's Pharmacy

Synopsis

Perfection or near-perfection is rare in any area of medicine. Dr. Bill Cham has achieved it in the treatment of two common cancers, basal cell carcinoma and squamous cell carcinoma. Dr. Cham's treatment also eliminates actinic keratosis, a usually benign (but potentially malignant) skin condition of middle ages and older. What's near-perfection? A treatment that:

- Works nearly every time
- Has no adverse side effects
- Is inexpensive compared with other treatments

According to a recent story from the Associated Press, government advisers to the Institute of Medicine are warning that the U.S. is facing a crisis in cancer care. The risk of cancer increases with age, they said, and by 2030, new cases are expected to reach 2.3 million a year. They predict there may be a shortage of oncology specialists to care for all of them. Of the 13 new cancer treatments approved by the FDA last year, only one was shown to extend survival by more than a median of six months. (Is that really extending life or just prolonging death?) The drugs all cost more than $5,900 per month and that doesn't include doctor and hospital bills, surgeries, treatments, or caretakers. It may be even worse since the studies used to test the different therapies didn't include enough people over 65 who tend to have other health problems in addition to cancer. Part of the problem is the complexity of the treatments, according to the report, which often involve genetic testing to determine which tumors are most likely to respond to which therapy. One would think that a totally new way to cure cancer would be welcomed with jubilation and relief, but as is often the case, if the research comes from an outsider and is not based on some new drug, it is often overlooked. Now for the good news! There is already a cure for some cancers. An old folk remedy for skin cancer has been proven to be effective, not just for eliminating the cancer, but actually replacing it with healthy tissue, leaving not even a scar to show where it had been. Many plants in the same family as the common eggplant contain a chemical called solasodine glycoside, or BEC5. When applied topically, the compound causes apoptosis (spontaneous death) in cancer cells, effectively causing them to commit suicide.

I got the e-book free when I ordered Curaderm cream online (but not from because for some odd reason they purged the product listing even though they used to sell it here). The only thing I really wanted to know was how to use the cream, didn't care where it came from or how they discovered it, just how to use it. Well the book has maybe 2-3 pages on usage out of almost 100 pages, the rest of the book being theory and clinical results (with some fairly gory pictures). My only experience with the cream was for a very suspicious black growth on, of all places, the palm of my hand, which I'd had for at least 2 years (I watched it hoping it'd go away but it never did). Anyway, tried this cream on it and after about 2 weeks most of the black thing came off when I went to change the bandage to apply new cream. There was a bit of residual so I used the cream for about another week before stopping. It's been half a year and so far nothing has returned, so I'm pleased to report this cream helped me to remove it. I did try the cream on a bump on my nose, however I only did this for about a week before stopping (the bump was gone and the flesh left looked ok), however the bump returned after it healed, so my guess is I just didn't use it long enough in this case. However based on my limited results I'd say Curaderm looks promising. The only other thing I'd add is you can almost be sure the cream you get will be separated (must keep below 77F, which in America is hard to do when it is shipped unrefrigerated, unless you order in dead of winter). There is a procedure to reconstitute the cream, however my experience there is it only partially works, the cream will remain very liquid, and not really be a cream anymore. This makes it more difficult to use.
